EXECUTIVE SUMMARY:
WARDROBE CHANGE DOES NOT BRING DEMOCRACY

On 30 March 2011, the military regime’s long-running play ‘roadmap to democracy’ concluded almost eight years after its release. In the military stronghold of Naypyidaw, President-elect Thein Sein was sworn in along with Vice-Presidents Tin Aung Myint Oo and Mauk Kham and 30 new cabinet ministers. The ceremony also marked the dissolution of the State Peace and Development Council (SPDC). “Peace and Development Council” offices across Burma were renamed as “General Administrative Departments.” Twenty-six out of the new cabinet’s 30 ministers are either retired SPDC military officials or former junta ministers. Beyond the change from military uniforms to Burmese traditional dress, which has been described by the regime as a “transfer of power to a civilian government”, nothing has changed in Burma as a result of the 7 November election and the convening of a Parliament dominated by former high-ranking SPDC officials.

The roadmap sequel, “discipline-flourishing democracy” has been scripted to legalize and perpetuate the SPDC’s infamous malgovernance and oppression. “Retired” SPDC Chairman Sr Gen Than Shwe ensured he would continue to dominate Burma’s politics by naming himself the leader of a newly-created State Supreme Council. Even before Parliament convened, Than Shwe issued a series of laws that were designed to shackle the Parliament and make it a hostage of the military. When Parliament met in late January, the proceedings took place under tight control. SPDC-imposed procedures for parliamentary proceedings stifled debate and severely restricted media coverage.

The situation in ethnic nationality areas has deteriorated since the November election. In Karen State, SPDC Army forces and a breakaway faction of the DKBA have been engaged in ongoing fighting. The conflict has caused hundreds of civilians to flee to Thailand. SPDC Army forces also brought increased pressure against ceasefire groups, in particular the Kachin Independence Army (KIA) in Kachin State and the Shan State Army – North (SSA-N) and the United Wa State Army (UWSA) in Shan State. The regime is clearly preparing to launch major offensives against all of these groups, which rejected the SPDC’s Border Guard Force scheme. The situation is grim for communities living in conflict areas, as the military prepares to step up its notorious ‘four cuts’ campaign. The ‘four cuts’ strategy that targets civilians in an attempt to undermine resistance forces is one of the main causes of serious international crimes in ethnic areas.

There has been no improvement of the human rights situation in Burma. More than 2,000 political prisoners languish in Burma’s jails under harsh detention conditions and inadequate access to treatment for serious health conditions. Freedom of information and freedom of speech are severely restricted. Recently, the regime sentenced reporter Sithu Zeya to eight years in prison for taking photos in Rangoon when there were a series of deadly bomb blasts on 15 April 2010. In February, a SPDC Court sentenced DVB reporter Maung Maung Zeya to 13 years in prison under the Electronics Act and the Unlawful Association Act. Following the release of Daw Aung San Suu Kyi, the SPDC Censorship Board restricted coverage of Daw Suu’s release and her subsequent activities. In mid-November, it was reported that SPDC authorities ordered internet cafe owners in Rangoon to install CCTV cameras to monitor internet users. In March, the SPDC-controlled Myanmar Post and Telecommunications ordered all internet cafés across Burma to stop providing Voice over Internet Protocol (VoIP) communication services.

As for Burma’s economy, the sham transition to civilian rule has been marked by a mass sell-off of state-owned properties to regime cronies. The widening gap between salaries for civil servants and private sector workers has led to strikes over low wages and poor working conditions. The most serious blow to Burma’s ability to improve the quality of life for its people came when MPs failed to address the country’s serious and ongoing education and health issues. The national budget for the 2011-2012 fiscal year allocated a staggering 1.8 trillion kyat (US$2 billion), or 23.6%, for military expenditures. By contrast, the health and education sectors received a paltry 99.5 billion kyat (US$110 million), or 1.3%, and 314 billion kyat (US$349 million), or 4.13% respectively. In addition, it appears that the budget fails to accurately reflect revenues especially from exports of oil and gas.

The final step in the junta’s roadmap has not changed conditions in Burma in the slightest – with the possible exception that many international corporations now think they can respectably invest in the country and exploit its cheap labor. The SPDC has perpetuated a cruel hoax on its own people and the international community. Whether the SPDC is successful in its sleight of hand depends on the resolve of international leaders to stay the course in keeping pressure on Burma’s new regime so it will enact true reform and engage in genuine dialogue for peace and national reconciliation. World leaders cannot let the regime’s mirage of democracy to continue while Burma’s people still suffer under authoritarian rule. The promise of democracy in Burma must be genuinely fulfilled.
SPDC STILL IN POWER

- SPDC dissolves itself, but the newly-elected Parliament is still controlled by former SPDC officials.
- SPDC bypasses the new Parliament and issues laws designed to maintain the military’s grip on power.
- Parliamentary laws gag MPs and restrict civilian access to Parliament.
- Many MPs complain about detention-like conditions in Naypyidaw.
- No room for debate in the new Parliament.
- No women in the Cabinet.

On 30 March, the SPDC completed its transformation to the façade of a civilian regime. President-elect Thein Sein was sworn in along with Vice-Presidents Tin Aung Myint Oo and Mauk Kham and 30 new cabinet ministers. The ceremony also marked the dissolution of the SPDC. To complete the cosmetic makeover, “Peace and Development Council” offices across Burma were renamed as “General Administrative Departments.”

Despite the regime’s much touted “transition to a civilian government,” it is clear that the same military men who were in power under the SPDC’s reign are still ruling Burma. The newly-elected Parliament placed former SPDC high-ranking officials at the top of the country’s political system:

- Former SPDC PM Thein Sein is Burma’s new President.
- Former SPDC third-in-command Shwe Mann and former SPDC Minister of Culture Khin Aung Myint are the Speakers of the People’s Assembly and National Assembly respectively.
- Former SPDC Secretary-1 Tin Aung Myint Oo is one of the two Vice Presidents.
- Out of the new cabinet’s 30 ministers, 26 are either retired SPDC military officials or former junta ministers, while only four are civilians.
- Of the 14 Chief Ministers at the Division and State level, six are former SPDC Commanders and three are former SPDC ministers.
- Tin Aye is the Chairman of the incoming Election Commission. A former Lieutenant General, Tin Aye is a protégé of Sr Gen Than Shwe.
- There are no women in the Cabinet. Only two out of 39 Deputy Ministers are women.

Than Shwe calls the shots

Despite stepping down as Burma’s Head of State and Commander-in-Chief of the Armed Forces, Sr Gen Than Shwe ensured he would continue to steer Burma’s politics. In a surprise move, Than Shwe created and named himself as leader of the eight-member State Supreme Council. The Council, which is not mentioned in the 2008 constitution, is expected to provide “guidance” to the new regime. The Council comprised several former top SPDC generals: Sr Gen Than Shwe, Vice Sr Gen Maung Aye, People’s Assembly Speaker Shwe Mann, President Thein Sein, Vice President Tin Aung Myint Oo, and Election Commission Chairman Tin Aye.

Not everyone in the military was happy with Than Shwe’s efforts to place his loyalists in the new regime’s top posts. On 10 February, the SPDC reportedly placed Lt Gen Myint Aung under house arrest because he refused the post of Defense Minister.

New laws strengthen military power

Beginning in October 2010, SPDC Chairman Than Shwe issued a series of laws designed to maintain the military’s grip on power. By enacting these laws before the newly-elected Parliament convened. Than Shwe ensured that lawmakers had no say with regard to key policy issues that are vital to the military.

- 21 October 2010: Laws governing parliamentary proceedings
  These laws impose severe restrictions on parliamentary debate and participation. As a result, nothing can happen in the Parliament that does not meet with the approval of regime officials. [See below Restrictions dominate parliamentary proceedings]

- 4 November 2010: Military draft law
  The law stipulates that males aged 18 to 45 and females aged 18 to 35 may be drafted to serve in the armed forces for two years. The service term could be increased to five years in times of national emergencies. The law also states that those who avoid conscription could be imprisoned for up to five years. Observers suggested that the SPDC adopted the new law in an attempt to avoid future claims that recruiters forced people to join the army and to offset the increasing rate of desertions.

- 17 January 2011: Special Fund Law
  The law allows the Commander-in-Chief of the Armed Forces to use a “special fund” for any expenses related to national defense and security. The law also states that the Commander-in-Chief is not accountable to any institution for the use of the fund.

- 27 January 2011: Budget for the 2011-2012 fiscal year
  The SPDC allocated 23.6% of the 7.6 trillion kyat (US$8.45 billion) budget for military expenditures. By contrast, the regime allocated a paltry 5.4% to the health and education sectors combined. The budget also earmarked 20 billion kyat (about US$22 million) for the office of the SPDC.

New Parliament: MPs under “house arrest”

“Under the tightened security, even USDP members felt like people under house arrest.” - A USDP MP from Mandalay.

On 31 January, the People’s Assembly and the National Assembly convened amid tight security in Naypyidaw for Burma’s first parliamentary session in 22 years. The 14 Division and State Parliaments also convened.

Many MPs complained about living in detention-like conditions in Naypyidaw. When MPs were not in session, they faced severe restrictions on movement. MPs were confined to guesthouses in small rooms without radio or TV and no clean running water. MPs were barred from receiving visitors at the guesthouse. MPs who attended parliamentary proceedings received a 10,000 kyat (US$11.50) daily allowance but ended up spending most, if not all, on meals, accommodation, and transportation.

Restrictions dominate parliamentary proceedings

The laws governing parliamentary proceedings gag MPs and restrict civilian access to the newly-elected Parliament:

- The laws prevent MPs from making any comment which is deemed to endanger national security, the unity of the country, or violate the 2008 constitution.
- MPs face up to two years in jail if they “write, print or distribute by any means parliament-related documents, information, statistics, drawings, charts or other references.”
- MPs must submit parliamentary questions ten days before the start of a meeting. Questions must not affect international relations, lead to the disclosure of state secrets, or undermine the interests of the state and its citizens.
• Any person who stages a demonstration in Parliament can be sentenced up to two years in prison.
• Anyone, other than MPs, who enters Parliament without authorization while the body is in session, is subject to a one-year jail term.

The SPDC also barred MPs from bringing cameras, laptop computers, mobile phones, and any type of voice transmission or recording devices inside the Parliament buildings.

In addition, the SPDC barred domestic journalists and foreign correspondents from covering the parliamentary proceedings. The junta allowed only state-run media to cover the session. SPDC authorities questioned reporters who took photographs near Parliament buildings and journalists who tried to approach MPs outside the Parliament premises.

Political Parties Registration Law still threatens parties and MPs

Article 12 of the Political Parties Registration Law states that the Election Commission must dissolve parties that fail to expel a member who is convicted and sentenced to a prison term. This provision, which still applies to newly-elected MPs, is an additional tool used by the regime to silence lawmakers. MPs brave enough to speak out will have to consider the consequences for their parties.

In addition, Article 12 of the Political Parties Registration Law states that parties can be dissolved if they “contact or abet” “unlawful” organizations or their members. In a thinly veiled attempt to isolate the NLD, on 5 April, the Election Commission issued a warning to all registered political parties to remind them not to contact unlawful organizations.

Parliamentary debate a sham

“The Parliament representatives […] are to discuss any matters in unison. It is important not to have a sense of contradiction. The precious time will be lost if they argue with each other. The Parliament should not be in a debate-like situation.” - National Assembly Speaker Khin Aung Myint

During the Parliament’s initial meetings, the proceedings were exclusively devoted to the nomination or election of the new regime’s cadre. However, the constitution did not allow for debate over the appointments. The MPs’ only task was to certify that nominees met the constitutional qualifications for the position. MPs complained that they could not assess the qualifications of the nominees because of the short time allocated to the process and because personal biographies were usually incomplete.

On 9 March, after being in session for over five weeks, MPs in both Houses of Parliament were finally allowed to discuss motions and pose questions to ministers. However, it was readily apparent that the process was just for show. Ministers brushed off questions that dealt with important issues such as the release of political prisoners, land ownership rights, and education in ethnic nationality areas. The ministers’ responses often included a large amount of statistical and background information but failed to address the substantive issues raised by the MPs. In addition, the Speakers rejected many questions because they were deemed “irrelevant.”

Parliamentary committees to control legislative activity

On 30 March, the National Parliament’s first session concluded. According to the constitution, the National Parliament is required to convene for a regular session “at least once a year.” As such, the Parliament will not have to convene again until 2012.
Committees formed during the Parliament’s first session will carry out the legislative groundwork until the Parliament reconvenes.

President Thein Sein hand-picked the MPs that make up the 10 parliamentary committees (four each for the People’s Assembly and the National Assembly plus two joint committees for the National Parliament).

USDP MPs hold the Chair and at least a 75% majority in all but one committee. In addition, the committees perform their duties with utmost secrecy. According to the parliamentary rules, the committees’ proceedings must “not be leaked out” and minutes of the meetings must “not be handed out.”

Personal info

Date of Birth: 20 April 1945

Place of birth: Bassein, Irrawaddy Division

Marital Status: Married to Khin Khin Win; he and his wife are on the April 2011 EU blacklist.

Key attributes

• Best suited to office work. Often referred to as “Senior Clerk”.
• Lacks ambition. Despite being promoted to Brigadier General in the War Office, he remained in the post traditionally held by a Colonel or Staff Officer.
• Obedient and non-confrontational. Considered a “yes man” of Sr Gen Than Shwe, his loyalty dates back to the early 1990s when he served as his personal assistant in the War Office.
• Not respected by other high ranking military officials, including Burma’s newly-elected Vice President Tin Aung Myint Oo, and considered too weak for the position of Prime Minister.
• Described among military officials as “Mr. Clean” because he is allegedly not as corrupt as other generals.
• Lacks business and economic acumen. Often relies on junta cronies Tay Za and Zaw Zaw for advice on economic issues.
• Known to be a close associate with drug lords from the Wa Army while serving as Commander of the Triangle Region Command.
• Developed a reputation of being “anti-Thai” when he was Commander of the Triangle Region Command and dealt with Thai authorities regarding conflicts along the border.

Key “achievements”

• Represented the junta at ASEAN summits, where he was known to be the quietest leader at the meetings.
• During the 2007 ASEAN summit in Singapore, prevented UN Sec Gen’s Special Advisor on Burma Ibrahim Gambari from briefing attendees, by threatening to pull out of the association.
• Led the National Convention Convening Commission, which served as the first step of the junta’s seven-step roadmap to democracy.
• As point man for relief efforts related to cyclone Nargis, delayed the issuance of visas to foreign aid workers and played a key role in preventing aid from reaching survivors.
• Failed to convince several armed opposition groups in Eastern Shan State to enter ceasefire agreements with the junta when he was Commander of the Triangle Regional Command.
• Confiscated land from local paddy farmers which was sold to Wa officer Sai Mya for the production of amphetamines when he was Commander of the Triangle Regional Command.
• In 1998, as Commander of the Triangle Regional Command, failed to respond to a plane crash that killed 39 people near Tachilek Township, Shan State; opting instead to play golf.

(In)famous quotes

In February 2007, as Chairman of the Committee for Prevention against Recruitment of Minors, Thein Sein said: “No forced recruitment is carried out and all the soldiers have joined the army of their own accord.”

In August 2007, during the final sessions of the National Convention, Thein Sein said with regard to the duration of the National Convention: “Actually we could have wrapped all of it up in a day, but there’s a need to make it look good, isn’t there?”

In August 2010, in a speech sent to SPDC ministries, Army battalions, and universities and colleges directing them to vote for the USDP in the 7 November election, Thein Sein said: “Vote for the USDP because only the USDP can bring peace and tranquility to the country—only vote for the USDP, don’t vote for the wrong people.”

On 30 March 2011, in his inaugural address to the National Parliament, Thein Sein said: “[...] Every citizen has to avoid any activities and speeches that harm the image of the country and interests of the people.”

VICE-PRESIDENT #1: TIN AUNG MYINT OO

Date of Birth: 29 May 1950

Tin Aung Myint Oo was nominated by the military MPs as Vice-President and elected on 3 February 2011. He was elected to the People’s Assembly in Naypyidaw’s Pobbathiri Township. Former SPDC fifth-in-command, Tin Aung Myint Oo is known to be foul-mouthed, abrasive and considered a hardliner.

In 1988, Tin Aung Myint Oo rose to prominence for his combat against Communist rebels in Eastern Shan State, which earned him the honorific title “Thih Thura.” During the 1990s he quickly rose through the military ranks as a protégé of junta’s Vice Sr Gen Maung Aye. In 1990, he served as Commanding Officer of the LIB 111 based in Sagaing Division until his appointment as Commander of Tactical Operations Command in 1992. In 1994, he was promoted to Brig Gen of MOC-1 based in Kyaukme, Northern Shan State. He was appointed SPDC Army Quartermaster General in 2002.

In October 2007, he was promoted to Secretary-1 of the SPDC, replacing Gen Thein Sein who had just been appointed Prime Minister. According to military sources, there is a rivalry between Tin Aung Myint Oo and Thein Sein, whom he considered a weak candidate for the position of PM. In March 2009, Tin Aung Myint Oo was promoted to the rank of General. Following his promotion, he became more influential among regional military commanders and the commanders of the Bureau of Special Operations. He reportedly used his military power and position as Secretary-1 to undermine PM Thein Sein’s authority, by not allotting any of the military’s budget to projects run by Thein Sein. This led many Ministers to say that the Secretary-1 had taken over the PM’s power.

Tin Aung Myint Oo also serves as Chairman of the Myanmar Economic Corporation (MEC), the military’s economic arm. He is reputed to be extremely wealthy and corrupt, having used his position as head of the Myanmar Trade Council to enrich himself, his family business, and business allies.

He is considered loyal to Sr Gen Than Shwe and Vice Sr Gen Maung Aye. According to military observers, Tin Aung Myint Oo is part of Than Shwe’s divide and rule strategy - also including former SPDC Generals Shwe Mann and Aung Thaung - to create three rival factions within the military. He is on the April 2011 EU blacklist.

VICE-PRESIDENT #2: MAUK KHAM aka MAUNG OHN

Date of Birth: 1950

Mauk Kham was nominated by the National Assembly as Vice-President and elected on 3 February 2011. He is an ethnic Shan from Muse Township, Shan State. Initial results from the 7 November 2010 election found he lost his constituency by thousands of votes. However, after advance votes were counted, he was elected to the National Assembly in Shan State’s Constituency.

According to observers, his ethnic nationality made him a preferred choice for Vice-President to garner support for the new Parliament among ethnic nationality groups.

Mauk Kham studied at the Mandalay Medical Institute. He is a physician by profession and runs a private clinic and manages a private hospital in Lashio Township, Shan State. Before the elections, he was reputed not to have any political aspirations and best known for his support for Shan culture. Between 1995 and 2004, Mauk Kham was closely linked with Col Gunyawd, leader of the ceasefire group Shan State National Army (SSNA). He was also known to associate with Tin Aung Myint Oo while he was based in the Northeast Regional Command.³

Despite the convening of the newly-elected Parliament, Burma’s ‘democratically-elected’ regime is nothing more than a disguised version of the military dictatorship that has ruled Burma until 30 March 2011. The new cabinet is composed of 30 Ministers. Only four have no prior connections to the military. The remaining 26 are either retired military officials or ministers in the former SPDC cabinet. Twenty-five are on the April 2011 EU blacklist. No women were appointed to the cabinet. Two out of 39 Deputy Ministers are women. However, deputies are not considered part of the Cabinet.

AT THE LOCAL LEVEL:
ETHNIC NATIONALITIES UNDERREPRESENTED

- In Division and State Parliaments all Speakers and Deputy Speakers are USDP MPs.
- All but three of the State and Division Chief Ministers are former high-ranking military officials or SPDC Ministers.
- Division and State Ministers of Security and Border Affairs are military personnel nominated by the Commander-in-Chief of the Armed Forces.
- USDP MPs account for over 60% of the remaining ministers in ethnic States.

Despite hopes that the elections would bring greater representation for ethnic nationalities in Burma, USDP MPs filled all the key positions in the Division and State Parliaments. Ethnic nationality parties also remain underrepresented in ministerial positions compared to the number of seats won.

On 31 January, the State and Division Parliaments elected Speakers and Deputy Speakers for their respective Parliaments. All the Speakers and Deputy Speakers are USDP MPs. In Karenni State, the Speaker is a former SPDC Army Regional Commander and is on the EU blacklist. On 11 February, the 14 State and Division Parliaments approved the appointment of their respective Chief Ministers. All but three of the State and Division Chief Ministers are former high-ranking military officials or SPDC ministers. Six of the Chief Ministers are former SPDC Commanders and three are former SPDC ministers. Thirteen are USDP MPs and one is a military-appointed MP. Thirteen are on the most recent EU blacklist.

On 30 March, President Thein Sein appointed the Division and State ministers who had been selected by the respective Chief Ministers. However, all the Division and State Ministers of Security and Border Affairs are military personnel nominated by the Commander-in-Chief of the Armed Forces. In addition, USDP MPs account for over 60% of the remaining ministers in ethnic States.

PARLIAMENT WHO’S WHO: STRONGMEN, DRUG LORDS, AND CRONIES

The generals’ new clothes

In April 2010, more than 50 high-ranking SPDC officials resigned from the military to contest the elections as civilian members of the newly-formed USDP. The USDP emerged from the SPDC-backed mass organization Union Solidarity and Development Association (USDA).

Key players from the military regime elected to the parliamentary assemblies included five former top SPDC generals and about 30 former SPDC Ministers and Deputy Ministers, including former SPDC PM Thein Sein.

Shwe Mann
Speaker of the People’s Assembly

Shwe Mann was elected to the People’s Assembly from Naypyidaw’s Zeyathiri Township. On 31 January, he was elected Speaker of the People’s Assembly. Shwe Mann is the junta’s former third-in-command. He became a powerful figure in the regime when he was appointed Joint Chief of Staff for the Army, Navy, and Air Force in November 2001, a position he held until he stepped down in April 2010 to contest the elections with the USDP.

In the aftermath of the 2003 Depayin Massacre, he met with ethnic leaders in Sagaing Division to obtain their silence about the incident. Military analysts suggested that Shwe Mann was behind the resumption of military offensives in Karen State in 2006. Despite working under the direct command of Maung Aye, he is thought to be loyal to Than Shwe.

Khin Aung Myint
Speaker of the National Assembly

Khin Aung Myint is the former SPDC Minister of Culture. He holds the Mandalay Division Constituency 8 National Assembly seat as a USDP candidate. He became Speaker of the National Assembly on 31 January. Khin Aung Myint is a reputed regime hardliner. He is the former Director of Public Relations and Psychological Warfare under the SPDC Ministry of Defense. He was also joint secretary of the National Convention Convening Commission and a member of the SPDC’s Constitution Drafting Commission.

He is considered quite knowledgeable about ethnic nationalities and played a key role in pressuring ethnic nationalities and ceasefire groups to support the National Convention. In November 2007, he traveled to Shan and Kachin States to pressure ethnic ceasefire groups into issuing declarations against Daw Aung San Suu Kyi’s 8 November 2010 statement that expressed her willingness to have meaningful dialogue with the SPDC. Together with SPDC Information Minister Brig Gen Kyaw Hsan and FM Maj Gen Nyan Win, Khin Aung Myint was a member of the junta’s “Spoke Authoritative Team.” The body represented the junta at meetings with international interlocutors, such as US diplomats in Beijing in June 2007 and UN Under-Sec Gen for Political Affairs Ibrahim Gambari during his visits to Burma. He was a former board member of the Union of Myanmar Economics Holdings, and remains on the Central Organizing Committee of the GONGO, Myanmar War Veterans Organization.
Aung Thaung

Aung Thaung is the former SPDC Minister of Industry-1. He is one of Than Shwe’s most trusted advisors and his son is married to the daughter of Vice Sr Gen Maung Aye. He is described as a hardliner within the USDP. Because of his family and business connections, he is also considered “untouchable.” His family runs IGE, one of the richest firms in Burma which deals in the banking, pipeline construction, exporting, and logging industries. He is a former high ranking member of the USDA and said to have been behind the Depayin Massacre and the crackdown on the Saffron Revolution. He has a strong anti-Western stance and is thought to have organized demonstrations against the UN Security Council vote outside the US and British Embassies in Rangoon in early 2007. He reportedly opposed the November 2010 release of Daw Aung San Suu Kyi, as he considered her a threat to the regime. He was elected to the People’s Assembly in his native Thaungtha Township in Mandalay Division.

Htay Oo

Htay Oo is the former SPDC Minister of Agriculture and Irrigation and the General Secretary of the USDA from 2004 to 2010. He is reportedly a close confidant of Than Shwe. During his election campaign, he led a so-called moderate party faction of the USDP, whose key members included Minister of Labor Aung Kyi and Railways Minister Aung Min. He was elected to the People’s Assembly in his native Hinthada Township in Irrawaddy Division.

Aung Kyi

Aung Kyi is the former SPDC Minister of Labor. He has served as a key public relations figure for the junta. In 2006, he became Deputy Minister of Labor and helped defuse tensions with the International Labor Organization (ILO) over forced labor when the ILO threatened to refer the situation to the International Court of Justice. In October 2007, he was promoted to Minister of Labor and was also designated as the SPDC liaison officer to Daw Aung San Suu Kyi. He met with Daw Suu nine times between October 2007 and January 2010. Aung Kyi is said to be more accessible and have a better understanding of the workings of the outside world than other generals. He was elected to the People’s Assembly in Mingala Taungnyunt Township, Rangoon Division.

Kyaw Hsan

Kyaw Hsan is the former SPDC Minister of Information. As a former USDA leader in Sagaing Division, he is known for his central role in the Depayin Massacre. He was appointed Minister of Information in September 2002 and used his authority over the SPDC’s Censorship Board to control media outlets and curtail any criticism against the regime. Since early 2006, he has taken a tough stance toward Western and exiled media agencies. He was elected to the People’s Assembly in Pale Township, Sagaing Division.
Nyan Win

Nyan Win is the former SPDC FM. He is considered loyal to Vice Sr Gen Maung Aye, as he served under him when he was Eastern Region Command Commander in Shan State. During his military career, he gained an extensive knowledge of military intelligence matters. Before his appointment as FM in 2004, he was the Deputy Chief of Military Training for the Armed Forces. Nyan Win had little international experience in diplomacy prior to his position as FM. He was elected to the Pegu Division Parliament in Zeegone Constituency 1.

Soe Naing

Soe Naing is the former SPDC Minister of Hotels and Tourism. He is thought to have played a role in the Depayin Massacre as he was Northwest Region Command Commander at the time. Before being appointed Minister of Hotels and Tourism in May 2006, Soe Naing served as Commander of the SPDC Army’s Southwestern and Southeastern Commands. He was elected to the People’s Assembly in Pyapon Township, Irrawaddy Division.

Myint Swe

An ethnic Mon, Myint Swe is personally close to Than Shwe and his family. He played a key role in the ousting of Khin Nyunt in 2004, which led to his promotion to head of Military Intelligence and earned him the trust of top SPDC leaders. In early 2006, he was appointed as Chief of BSO-5. After his appointment, he launched a campaign to track down businessmen, civil servants, and local journalists who were feeding information to the international media. In August 2010, he was promoted to SPDC Army Quartermaster General and rumored to be prime candidate in replacing Than Shwe as the Commander-in-Chief of the Armed Forces. He was elected to the Rangoon Division Parliament in Seikgyikanauungto Constituency 2.

ETHNIC NATIONALITY AREAS: CONFLICT ESCALATES

- In addition to the SPDC Army’s ongoing offensives against ethnic non-ceasefire groups, the regime increasingly targets ceasefire groups who rejected the junta’s Border Guard Force scheme.
- The regime relaunches its inhumane ‘four cuts’ strategy against civilians in conflict areas.
- In response to the SPDC Army’s ongoing attacks in ethnic areas, 12 ethnic opposition groups form a new military alliance.

Despite the 7 November election’s illusory promise of an inclusive democratic system, the situation in ethnic nationality areas continued to deteriorate. In addition to the SPDC Army’s ongoing offensives against ethnic non-ceasefire groups, the SPDC increasingly targeted ceasefire groups who rejected the junta’s Border Guard Force (BGF) scheme. The situation for residents living in conflict zones of ethnic States remained grim as the regime relaunched its inhumane ‘four cuts’ campaign.\(^4\)

Karen State: Conflict rages

Throughout January and February, SPDC Army and Democratic Karen Buddhist Army (DKBA) Brigade 5 forces engaged in heavy fighting.

* 10 January: SPDC Army troops shelled DKBA forces near Wah Lay and Phaluu Villages in Myawaddy Township, Karen State.\(^5\)
* 10-11 January: Fighting broke out between 200 SPDC Army troops and 300 DKBA soldiers in Phaluu Village, Myawaddy Township.\(^5\)
* 16 January: DKBA forces attacked an SPDC Army convoy carrying ammunition to the frontline in Kawkareik Township.\(^5\)

‘Four-cuts’: Cutting away homes and lives\(^4\)

The Burmese military has used the ‘four cuts’ strategy, or Hpyat lay hpyat, since the mid-1960s. It targets ethnic communities in conflict areas in order to weaken armed opposition groups. SPDC Army soldiers will go to any length required to cut-off their opponents’ potential access to four vital resources: food, money, potential recruits, and information. The notorious ‘four cuts’ is one of the main causes of serious international crimes in ethnic areas.

The regime forcibly relocates civilians, often by burning down their villages. This tactic, known as ‘sweeping an area’, is a way to break up and weaken ethnic communities and bring the areas under Tatmadaw control. The terrorizing of civilians, looting, torture and extra-judicial killings - where soldiers are given the authority to execute villagers without warning - are part of the standard operating procedure of the ‘four cuts’ strategy.

In recent years, thousands of villages in Shan, Kachin, Karenni, Mon, and Karen states have been targeted under the ‘four cuts’ strategy. It has resulted in significant internal displacement, particularly in Eastern Burma.

In early 2011, the military regime re-launched the ‘four cuts’ policy, with an additional ‘cut’ to sever communication routes between allied ethnic groups. The renewed campaign targets areas in Kachin State, Shan State, Karenni State, Karen State, and Tenasserim Division.

* 26-27 January: SPDC Army and DKBA Brigade 5 forces clashed in Kyauk Khet, Myawaddy Township.\(^6\)
* 1 February: DKBA Brigade 5 forces attacked the SPDC Army’s strategic “Three Mountain” military outpost located five kilometers from Kawkareik Township, Karen State, in an effort to cut off support for SPDC Army troops stationed in Myawaddy.\(^7\)

Hostilities between the SPDC Army and the Karen National Union (KNU) and its armed wing, the Karen National Liberation Army (KNLA) also continued.\(^8\)
• 10 March: KNLA troops ambushed an SPDC Army convoy traveling to Wah Lay Village in Myawaddy Township, Karen State. The attack killed 16 SPDC soldiers and wounded 17.9

• 15 March: KNLA Brigade 7 forces injured three SPDC Army soldiers in an attack on the SPDC Army’s LIB 54.10

• 21 March: KNLA forces killed seven SPDC soldiers and injured three during two attacks on SPDC Army troops near the Kanellay base in Wah Lay Village, Myawaddy Township.11

• 26 March: Soldiers from KNU Battalion 22 killed five SPDC Army soldiers during a clash in Paingkyon, Hlaingbwe Township.12

Shan State: Attacks on multiple fronts

Despite a ceasefire agreement signed in 1989, the SPDC Army and the Shan State Army-North (SSA-N) clashed numerous times in March 2011.13 On 21 March, the state-run newspaper New Light of Myanmar described the Shan State Army-North (SSA-N) as “insurgents”.14 The timeline below details the offensives:

• 13 March: Two hundred SPDC Army troops clashed with 60 SSA-N soldiers in Monghsu Township.15

• 14 March: Fighting between SPDC Army and SSA-N forces killed three villagers in a clash in Kyethi Township and in Mong Awd Village-tract, Monghsu Township.16 After the fighting, the SPDC Army dispatched reinforcements from LIBs 516, 248, 64, 191, and 290.17

• 15 March: Two clashes broke out between SPDC troops and SSA-N. The first occurred in Monghsu Township and in the second skirmish SPDC Army troops attacked the SSA-N Nam Lao base in Tangyan Township.18

• 16 March: SPDC troops overran and seized the SSA-N Nam Lao base. During the fighting, an SPDC Army artillery shell hit Nam Lao temple, killing four monks and injuring three. SPDC Army troops also laid landmines.19

• 17 March: The SPDC Army issued an ultimatum to the SSA-N to surrender by 20 March.20

• 18 March: SPDC Army troops clashed with SSA-N forces in Monghsu Township.21

The SPDC Army also clashed with the Shan State Army-South (SSA-S) and the National Democratic Alliance Army (NDAA).

• 7 January: SPDC Army forces open fire on the NDAA’s base on Loi Parng Nao, Kengtung Township.22

• 22 February: Fighting between the SPDC Army’s LIB 328 and SSA-S troops killed three SPDC Army soldiers and wounded one near Mongton Township.23

• 25 February: SSA-S forces ambushed SPDC Army soldiers near Ho Nam Taw Village in Mongton Township.24

In addition, the regime increased its military presence in Shan State with the deployment of thousands of soldiers near territory controlled by the Shan State Army - North (SSA-N) and the United Wa State Army (UWSA). SPDC Army personnel also blocked strategic transportation routes to hamper armed opposition forces.25

• 15 February: The SPDC Army deployed more troops and 16 tanks to areas controlled by SSA-N Brigades 1 and 7 in Kunhing and Monghsu Townships.26

• 24 February: SPDC Army forces closed roads leading to the SSA-N’s base in Wanhai in Kyethi Township.27 The SPDC also ordered the closure of the UWSA’s Hongpang bus line, which ran between Tachilek and Kengtung.28

• 10 March: About 200 SPDC Army soldiers were dispatched to the Lashio area of Northern Shan State to intimidate the SSA-N’s Brigade 1.29
Kachin State: Ceasefire broken, militarization increased

On 7 February, the Kachin Independence Organization’s (KIO’s) armed wing, the Kachin Independence Army (KIA), clashed with SPDC Army forces for the first time since signing a ceasefire agreement in 1994. The fighting was triggered by the incursion of SPDC troops into a KIO-controlled area near Mansi Township on the pretense of seeking illegal narcotics. 30 SPDC Army IB 15 Commander Lt Col Yin Htwe was killed and seven SPDC Army soldiers were injured in the fighting. 31

Since the 7 February skirmish, the SPDC Army has deployed additional forces and military equipment in Kachin State. In addition, the SPDC’s closure of major transportation routes, its increased presence, and its attempts to recruit Kachin youth into its ranks caused concern among the civilian population.

- 17 February: Around 100 Kachin youth sought refuge in a KIO military base after the SPDC’s Northern Command began a forced recruitment drive in Kachin State. 32
- 22 February: The SPDC Army deployed about 12 tanks and 200 soldiers near the KIO headquarters in Laiza. 33
- 23-25 February: SPDC troops from LIB 437 blocked a road connecting Mansi Township and Mung Hkawng with logs to prevent supplies reaching the KIA’s forces. The roadblock made it difficult for civilians in Laika Zup Ja Village and other small villages to receive food and other commodities. 34
- 1 March: It was reported that the SPDC Army had deployed over 15 military tanks to Waingmaw and Sadong, east of Laiza. 35

Chin State: Hostilities flare up

Even in Chin State, which has seen little fighting in recent times, there were several outbreaks of violence in Paletwa Township.

- 3 January: Arakan Liberation Army (ALA) forces killed four SPDC Army soldiers in a clash with SPDC Army troops. 36
- Mid-February: Chin National Army (CNA) forces killed one SPDC Army soldier and wounded another in a clash with SPDC Army LIB 55. 37
- 8 March: ALA forces killed three SPDC Army soldiers in a skirmish with SPDC Army troops. 38

In addition, SPDC authorities continued to harass local Chin communities. In February, the regime prohibited the use of a banner reading ‘Chin National Day’ and forced locals to adopt the title of ‘Chin State Day’ for the celebrations of their National Day. 39

Mon State: Ceasefire on shaky ground

The long-standing ceasefire between the New Mon State Party (NMSP) and the SPDC Army has been on shaky ground. On 4 February, the state-run newspaper New Light of Myanmar described the NMSP as “insurgents” for the first time since its ceasefire agreement in 1995. 40 In response, NMSP leaders stated they were ready to go to war with the regime. 41 Meanwhile, on 11 January the Mon National Defense Army, a former NMSP breakaway fraction, reunified with the NMSP. 42

New ethnic military alliance formed

In February, in response to the SPDC Army’s ongoing attacks in ethnic areas, 12 ethnic armed opposition groups, ceasefire groups, and political organizations from Burma agreed to form a new coalition - the Union Nationalities Federal Council (UNFC). 44 The alliance was established during a 12-16 March conference in Chiang Mai, Thailand, and included Rakhine, Chin, Karen, Karenni, Kachin, Lahu, Mon, Pa-O, Palaung, Shan, and Wa groups. 45 The UNFC decided to establish four military regions in Burma with the objective of sharing military resources if the SPDC Army attacked any of the coalition members. UNFC members also agreed that individual groups would not hold separate ceasefire talks with the regime.\textsuperscript{46} UNFC General Secretary Hongsa stated that the coalition was open to any group that supported the alliance’s aim “to establish a genuine union.”\textsuperscript{47}

FREEDOM OF INFORMATION:
THE CRACKDOWN CONTINUES

Following the 7 November 2010 elections, it soon became apparent that the regime had no intention of relaxing its severe restrictions on freedom of information.

Media persons face harassment and imprisonment

The SPDC continued to sentence reporters to lengthy prison terms. On 21 December 2010, a court in Rangoon’s Mingala Taungnyunt Township sentenced reporter Sithu Zeya to eight years in prison for taking photos near Kandawgyi Lake when there were a series of deadly bomb blasts on 15 April. On 4 February, a Rangoon District Court sentenced DVB reporter Maung Maung Zeya to 13 years in prison under the Electronics Act and the Unlawful Association Act.

The regime’s crackdown on freedom of information targeted foreign nationals, too. On 11 November 2010, SPDC authorities deported two Australian film-makers who were working on a documentary about independent media in Burma. On 10 February, SPDC authorities arrested Ross Dunkley, the Australian editor-in-chief and co-owner of the Myanmar Times. Reports differed on the reasons for Dunkley’s arrest. However, observers suggested that the real reason for Dunkley’s detention could be a business conflict with the Burmese co-owner of the Myanmar Times, USDP member Tin Tun Oo.

Internet monitoring, phone bugging stepped up

The regime tightened its grip on internet users with new measures. In mid-November, it was reported that SPDC authorities ordered internet café owners in Rangoon to install CCTV cameras to monitor internet users. On 2 March, the SPDC-controlled Myanmar Post and Telecommunications ordered all internet cafés across Burma to stop providing Voice over Internet Protocol (VoIP) communication services. The ban affects calls made over the internet through software such as Skype, Gtalk, and Pfingo. Observers believed that the difficulty in monitoring this form of communication might have been the reason behind the ban.

In addition, the regime increased surveillance of phone communications. On 4 January, it was reported that the SPDC Military Affairs Security (MAS) was preparing to monitor more than 3,000 mobile phones belonging to NLD leaders, politicians, social activists, journalists, artists, and corporate heads.

Censorship intensifies

Following the release of Daw Aung San Suu Kyi, the SPDC Censorship Board imposed severe restrictions over the coverage of Daw Suu’s release and her subsequent speeches and activities. On 21 November 2010, the Board suspended the publication of nine local news journals for up to two weeks because they reported on and published photos of Daw Aung San Suu Kyi’s activities. One of the suspended journals, First Eleven, published a front page title on the English Premier League that cryptically welcomed the release of Daw Suu.\(^\text{14}\) In mid-December 2010, it was reported that the Board barred various local news journals from publishing interviews with Daw Aung San Suu Kyi.\(^\text{15}\)

The SPDC’s censorship was not limited to print media. On 1 December 2010, The SPDC Information Ministry ordered local TV and radio stations not to broadcast interviews and performances of about a dozen actors, film makers, singers, and writers who had previously criticized the junta or showed support for Daw Aung San Suu Kyi.\(^\text{16}\)

Concerns over media freedom were further heightened after the SPDC set up its latest tool to control the flow of information.\(^\text{17}\) On 7 January, the SPDC Censorship Board established the 25-member Committee for Professional Conduct (CPC).\(^\text{18}\) The body, tasked with issuing guidelines to journalists and media organizations, includes members of the SPDC Censorship Board and the regime-backed Myanmar Writers and Journalists Association (MWJA).\(^\text{19}\) On 13 January, the Rangoon-based Eleven Media Group quit the CPC over concerns that the body would not be independent from the regime.\(^\text{20}\)

POLITICAL PRISONERS:
MORE THAN 2,000 STILL DETAINED

No amnesty for political prisoners

In his March 2011 report to the UN Human Rights Council, the UN Special Rapporteur on human rights in Burma Tomás Ojea Quintana said that there were still 2,189 political prisoners, including 177 women, in prisons across Burma.\(^1\) Despite hopes that the newly-elected Parliament could tackle the issue of political prisoners, the regime promptly ruled out the possibility of an amnesty law. During question time in the People’s Assembly on 22 March, SPDC Minister of Home Affairs Maung Oo said that the SPDC-drafted 2008 constitution only allows Burma’s President, not the Parliament, to grant amnesty to prisoners.\(^2\)

Detention conditions remain abysmal

According to the UN Special Rapporteur on human rights in Burma Tomás Ojea Quintana, 142 political prisoners suffer from serious medical conditions which require immediate attention.\(^3\) Between December 2010 and March 2011, reports continued to surface of political prisoners’ abysmal conditions, which included torture, ill-treatment, and the denial of medical treatment.

- 2 December: 88 Generation Student Nilar Thein began a hunger strike in Thayet prison in Magwe Division. Prison authorities subsequently placed her in solitary confinement and on 6 December prevented family members from visiting her.\(^4\)
- 8 December: Buddhist monk U Naymeinda aka Myo Min aka Nay Win, 50, died in Moulmein prison, Mon State, because of the lack of adequate medical care for a serious health condition that prevented him from eating and drinking.\(^5\) He was the 145\(^{th}\) political prisoner to die in Burmese prisons since 1988.\(^6\)
- 16 December: It was reported that 88 Generation Student leader Min Ko Naing was in poor health in Kengtung prison, Shan State, due to inadequate food rations and lack of exercise.\(^7\)
- Early January: Authorities in Rangoon’s Insein prison placed Sithu Zeya in solitary confinement because he failed to stand in the presence of the jail’s director.\(^8\) For nine days, prison authorities regularly took him out of his isolation cell and forced him to squat and crawl.\(^9\)
- 4 February: Authorities in Rangoon’s Insein prison placed political prisoner Phyo Wei Aung in solitary confinement for a month because he complained about senior inmates bullying other prisoners.\(^10\)
- 8 February: It was reported that authorities in Putao prison in Kachin State had denied family visits to Htet Htet Oo Wai for three months. Htet Htet Oo Wai is in solitary confinement and in poor health.\(^11\)
- 9 February: It was reported that authorities in Putao prison, Kachin State, denied medical treatment to Shan Nationalities League for Democracy (SNLD) Chairman Hkun Htun Oo, 66, for his deteriorating health.\(^12\)
- 15 March: It was reported that prison authorities in Myingyan prison, Mandalay Division, denied medical treatment to 88 Generation Student Thet Thet Aung. Thet Thet Aung suffers from hypertension and an unspecified stomach ailment.\(^13\)

- The SPDC rules out the possibility of an amnesty law that could free the 2,189 political prisoners still detained in Burma.
- Prison authorities continue to subject prisoners to torture, ill-treatment, and the denial of medical treatment.

FLEEING BURMA’S ‘DEMOCRACY’: MORE REFUGEES AND IDPS

UN says Burma is a regional burden

Since the convening of the Parliament, human rights abuses, persecution, and armed conflict have continued to displace large numbers of people. On 25 February, UN Special Rapporteur on human rights in Burma Tomás Ojea Quintana said that Burma was burdening other countries in the region. Ojea Quintana said that the “grave” human rights situation in Burma was causing more and more people to flee human rights abuses and persecution.¹

More Rohingya take to the sea

In January and February, authorities in Thailand, India, and Indonesia detained over 450 Rohingya boat people who attempted to flee persecution in Burma:

- 22 January: Thai Navy personnel arrested and detained 91 Rohingya boat people in Trang Province on charges of illegally entering the country.²
- 23 January: Thai authorities arrested and detained another group of 67 Rohingya boat people at a police station in Satun Province.³
- 1 February: After running out of provisions, a boat with 68 Rohingya reached landfall in Phuket, Thailand, while attempting to reach Malaysia. Thai authorities detained them for questioning.⁴
- 10 February: It was reported that Indian police found over 90 Rohingya stranded on the Andaman and Nicobar Islands.⁵
- 15 February: One hundred and twenty-nine Rohingya boat people reached landfall in Aceh Province, Indonesia.⁶

New arrivals at Thai-Burma border camps

In January, ongoing clashes between the DKBA and the SPDC Army in Karen State’s Myawaddy Township forced about 650 civilians to flee into Thailand.⁷

SPDC Army offensives fuel internal displacement

In March, the SPDC Army’s military operations and attempts to cut support and supply lines to Shan State Army - North (SSA-N) forces resulted in the forcible relocation of hundreds of villagers:

- 2 March: SPDC Army troops from IB 66 forced about 200 households in Nansang Township to relocate as part of the preparations for a new regional command.⁸
- 7 March: It was reported that SPDC troops in Nansang Township forced the residents of three villages to abandon their homes.⁹ It was also reported that between 200 and 300 villagers from Kunhing Township fled to safety.¹⁰
- 16 March: The seizure of the SSA-N’s Nam Lao base in Tangyan Township forced between 500 and 600 villagers from Monghsu Township to flee.¹¹
- 17 March: It was reported that SPDC Army personnel ordered the residents of 11 villages located in Kunhing, Nansang, and Kyethi Townships to leave their homes.¹²

Prices rise on political uncertainty

As Parliament convened in Naypyidaw, Burma’s economy reacted to the political uncertainties of a new regime. In addition, there were reports on hefty wage increases for civil servants and rumors of the issuance of a new 10,000 kyat bank note. As a result, commodity prices rose and wide fluctuations occurred in currency and gold values. In addition, an increase in diesel and gas prices caused further inflationary pressure.

- Currency and gold: The gold price in Rangoon rose from 630,000 kyat (US$720) to 640,500 kyat (US$732) while the exchange rate of the US dollar rose from 863 kyat to 875 kyat per dollar after state-run media announced the regime’s new list of cabinet ministers.

- Rice and cooking oil: Standard-size sacks of high-grade rice rose from 29,500 kyat (US$34) to 33,000 kyat (US$38) while another high-grade variety rose to 35,000 kyat (US$40), up from 30,000 kyat (US$34). The price of cooking oil rose as well. One viss (1.6 kilos) of peanut oil increased from 4,200 kyat (US$4.80) to 4,500 kyat (US$5.17) and sesame oil rose from 3,000 kyat (US$3.45) to 3,200 kyat (US$3.70).

- Fuel: During February, the price of diesel increased from 3,000 kyat (US$3.14) to 3,400 kyat (US$3.56) per gallon. During the first two weeks of March, the black market price of petrol rose steadily, reaching 3,800 kyat (US$4.30) per gallon in Rangoon and 5,500 kyat (US$6.20) in Mandalay.

In February, rumors of a shake-up in the SPDC leadership also hit the banking sector. Following rumors that SPDC Vice Sr Gen Maung Aye was about to be forcefully retired, bank account holders rushed to withdraw their savings from Kanbawza Bank, which is owned by junta crony and Maung Aye’s associate Aung Ko Win.

Military spending still top priority

On 27 January, the SPDC enacted the national budget for the 2011-2012 fiscal year. Out of the 7.6 trillion kyat (US$8.45 billion) budget, the junta allocated 1.8 trillion kyat (US$2 billion), or 23.6%, to military expenditure. By contrast, the health and education sectors received a paltry 99.5 billion kyat (US$110 million), or 1.3%, and 314 billion kyat (US$349 million), or 4.13% respectively.
Thousands strike in Rangoon

In a trend that started in early 2010, workers continued to strike over low salaries and poor working conditions.

- Early February: About 700 employees of two United World garment factories located in Rangoon’s Shwepyithar Industrial Zone went on strike in support of their demands for bonuses, overtime pay, an on-site medical clinic, and improvements to employee lavatories and water supply.10

- 8 March: About 3,000 workers at the Chinese-owned Tai Yi leather factory in Rangoon’s Hlaing Tharyar Township demonstrated against long working hours and pay cuts.11

- 22 March: About 500 workers at the New Way shoe factory in Rangoon’s Hlaing Tharyar Township went on strike after factory management rejected their demands for an increase in pay.12

Students protest

Students staged protests against the cost of transportation and the inadequate supply of electricity.

- 12 January: Around 800 university students in Kale, Sagaing Division, protested over a 100% increase in bus fares from 200 kyat to 400 kyat (US$0.45). The students demanded reduced fares, more frequent and regular bus services, and a prohibition on cargo being carried on school buses.13

- 8 March: More than 50 university students in Moulmein, Mon State, protested over power outages during their graduation exams period.14

Burma has the world’s sixth least free economy

On 12 January, the Heritage Foundation released its 2011 Index of Economic Freedom. The index ranked Burma as the world’s sixth least free economy out of a total of 179 countries assessed. The report stated that Burma’s economy was “afflicted with extensive state controls and structural problems” and noted that “investment freedom, property rights, and freedom from corruption are extraordinarily weak.”15

Regime cronies acquire state properties

In January and February, the SPDC netted about 800 billion kyat (US$800 million) from the sale of 291 state-owned properties.16 Junta cronies Tay Za, Steven Law, Zaw Zaw, and Chit Khaing acquired most of the properties in an auction process that observers considered akin to money-laundering.17

SEZs line the cronies’ pockets

On 27 January, the SPDC enacted a Special Economic Zone (SEZ) Law to provide incentives for foreign investment in Burma, with a particular focus on the manufacturing, processing, and information technology sectors.18 Proposed SEZ sites include the Thilawa port in Rangoon’s Thanlyin Township and the Tavoy deep-seaport project in Tenasserim Division.19

The Tavoy project is already under construction by the Thai company Italian-Thai Development (ITD).20 ITD is also building an industrial estate next to the port that will contain a power plant, a steel mill, an oil refinery, a fertilizer plant, a shipyard, and a variety of other industries. The primary purpose of the port project is to construct a natural gas pipeline that will link off-shore gas deposits near Tavoy to Pu Nam Ron in Thailand’s Kanchanaburi Province.21

Foreign companies have been lining-up for investment opportunities linked to the port’s infrastructure. The Japan Bank for International Cooperation and the Japan Business Federation are exploring involvement in financing the Tavoy Thai conglomerate Loxley also showed an interest in investing in the project. In January 2011, ITD arranged free visits to Tavoy for Thai entrepreneurs in order to encourage investment.

In addition to foreign investors, regime cronies are expected to greatly benefit from SEZs. The regime awarded significant contracts related to the Tavoy project to Max Myanmar, the company owned by regime crony Zaw Zaw. Regime officials also gave permission to the regime-controlled Union of Myanmar Economic Holdings and cronyn-run enterprises Htoo Trading, Max Myanmar, and Asia World to build new jetties at Rangoon’s Thilawa port.

Tavoy projects threaten local livelihoods and exploit workers

Although SEZs are touted as a means to create employment, the Tavoy project has so far proved detrimental to the livelihoods of local residents.

Since the US$8.6 billion Tavoy contract was signed in November, ITD and the regime confiscated the land of 11 villages located in or near the project areas. This resulted in a loss of livelihood for approximately 3,000 residents. In addition, reports surfaced of other villages being forced to relocate to make way for construction. Local fishermen also expressed their concern that the Tavoy project would limit their ability to fish.

The development of the SEZ also pushed up property prices. Within a month of the launch of the port, property prices in Tavoy increased tenfold.

In addition, poor working conditions in projects related to the Tavoy SEZ caused worker unrest. In early February, about 70 Burmese construction workers employed by ITD who have been working on the Tavoy port project went on strike to protest low wages, long working hours, and unequal treatment with their Thai coworkers. Workers also complained of poor housing and working conditions.

China’s looting of Burma continues

China continued to make up the lion’s share of Burma’s foreign investment. China accounted for US$3.18 billion (or 89%) of the US$3.56 billion worth of foreign investment in Burma from November 2010 to January 2011. China’s latest investments put the country in first place as Burma’s largest investor based on investments since 1988. Thailand slipped to second place. Since the 7 November election, several Chinese companies signed deals with the regime regarding oil, natural gas, and hydropower projects:

- 10 November: China’s Three Gorges, Sinohydro, and China Southern Power Grid Companies signed an agreement with the Electricity Generating Authority of Thailand and Burma’s International Group of Entrepreneur to conduct a feasibility study of a proposed US$10 billion hydropower project on the Salween River.
- 24 November: The SPDC Ministry of Electric Power-1 signed MoUs with China’s Huaneng Lancang River Hydropower and SPDC-favorite Asia World to jointly develop the Shweli hydropower project in Sagaing Division and with Asia World to develop the Bilin hydropower project in Mon State.
- 12 December: Burma’s state-run media reported that China had signed a US$2.4 billion loan agreement with the SPDC related to reinforcing infrastructure around the construction of the natural gas pipeline from Kyaukpyu, Arakan State, to China’s Yunnan Province.
- 6 January: The SPDC awarded a contract to China’s Yunnan Construction Engineering and the junta-backed Yuzana Company for the rebuilding of a 312km-stretch of the Stilwell Road.

NLD & DAW AUNG SAN SUU KYI: STILL KEY POLITICAL PLAYERS

NLD, Daw Suu step up political activities

The NLD, under the leadership of Daw Aung San Suu Kyi, remain Burma’s best hope for genuine dialogue and national reconciliation. While a minuscule and divided parliamentary opposition was bogged down in a fruitless political process, the NLD stepped up its activities to promote broad political participation across Burma.

On 8 and 9 February, Daw Aung San Suu Kyi held meetings with over 200 youths from Burma at the party headquarters in Rangoon. The meetings kickstarted the formation of the NLD-promoted nationwide network of activists.

On 12 February, more than 400 people, including NLD members, veteran politicians, ethnic activists, and foreign diplomats, participated in a ceremony to mark the 64th anniversary of Union Day at the NLD headquarters in Rangoon. Speaking at the ceremony, Daw Aung San Suu Kyi said that the rule of law and an inclusive political system were needed in order to foster national unity and reconciliation.

From 3 to 18 March, NLD Central Executive Committee members held talks with Township Committee representatives from 13 States and Divisions at the party headquarters in Rangoon. In addition, in March NLD members from 19 townships established a farmers’ network in coordination with the NLD Central Executive Committee. The network was formed to provide legal advice and important information to farmers.

On 27 March, about 300 people, including NLD members, ethnic leaders, veteran politicians, and foreign diplomats attended a ceremony to mark the 66th anniversary of Resistance Day at the NLD headquarters in Rangoon. Daw Aung San Suu Kyi marked the event with an appeal for better relations with the new regime “for the sake of the country.” Daw Suu also urged the authorities to create “fair political conditions by holding politically meaningful dialogue and releasing all political prisoners unconditionally.”

In addition, Daw Aung San Suu Kyi intensified meetings and contacts with UN officials and members of the diplomatic community to develop solutions for Burma’s political, social, and economic crises.

NLD outlines economic policy

The NLD also issued statements and position papers on key policy issues, such as economic sanctions, trade, and foreign investment.

On 4 January, the NLD released “Analysis of the Economy,” a position paper that outlined the party’s stance concerning foreign investment in Burma. The NLD said that foreign investment in the country should take into consideration the social and environmental impact, respect for labor rights, and the creation of employment opportunities and technological investments. The NLD also highlighted the need to establish the rule of law and transparent, accountable governance in Burma.

On 28 January, in an audio message to the World Economic Forum, Daw Aung San Suu Kyi reiterated the NLD’s stance and added that without national reconciliation and political stability, “social and economic development will remain mere pipedreams.”

On 8 February, the NLD issued a four-page position paper that outlined the party’s assessment of economic sanctions on Burma. The NLD’s document concluded that:

- Sanctions have not affected economic conditions in Burma “to any notable degree.”
- The regime’s poor economic policies and mismanagement are the main causes of Burma’s economic crisis.
- Land confiscation and lack of freedom in production and marketing - not sanctions - have negatively affected Burma’s agricultural sector, which employs the majority of Burma’s population.
- An unfavorable business environment comprised of multiple exchange rates, lack of accountability, and corruption has impeded productive investments.
- Burma’s increased foreign trade and strengthened financial resources from the sale of the country’s natural resources has not resulted in improved standards of living or increased budget allocations for health and education.
- Businesses that have already invested, or are thinking of investing in Burma should observe guidelines aimed at conserving the ecological environment, protecting the rights of workers, and promoting civil society.
- National reconciliation based on “an all inclusive political process” should be “central” to any consideration of changes in sanctions policies and the release of all political prisoners is a “critical requirement” for the removal of sanctions.

The paper also called for talks with the US, the EU, Canada, and Australia in order to reach agreement on “when, how and under what circumstances sanctions might be modified in the interests of democracy, human rights, and a healthy economic environment.”

Daw Suu 360

After her release from seven years under house arrest, Daw Aung San Suu Kyi spoke on a wide range of issues concerning the past, present, and future of Burma. What follows is a selection of policy-oriented statement that Daw Suu has made since her release on 13 November 2010.

On the NLD

Daw Aung San Suu Kyi said that the NLD continued to be a viable political party that was fully engaged in Burma’s political affairs outside of Parliament. She rejected the idea that the NLD became an NGO when it was dissolved by the SPDC. “This [the NLD] is a political party. […] We said that we will work in humanitarian affairs. Humanitarian affairs cannot be separated from politics.”

Daw Suu said that one of the party’s top priorities is the establishment of a “network of people working for democracy” that includes all those who are “interested in bringing about necessary change.”

On the NLD’s internal operations, Daw Suu said she wanted to apply democratic principles within the party and indicated that the leadership should be “chosen from the bottom up.” She said she did not believe in “one person dominating the whole party” and wanted to “give everybody a chance to take over, if they are good at it.”

On the 2010 elections

Daw Suu pointed out that “unfair elections do not bring about democracy,” and “it’s no use saying that you can choose freely between a rock and a hard place. […] We want meaningful choice.”

Daw Aung San Suu Kyi said the NLD didn’t participate in the 2010 elections because they “didn’t believe that there was going to be any major change.” Daw Suu said she was surprised some of the political parties thought the election would have a different outcome. However, she expressed her willingness to work with all parties in the post-election period. She said: “We are ready to co-operate with any […] of the thirty-seven contending political parties that really have the same objectives and want to work for democracy.”

On the military and dialogue

Daw Aung San Suu Kyi said she “highly regards” the Tatmadaw as an institution. “The Tatmadaw was founded by my father. I personally value and cherish it very much.” She said: “I don’t want to see the military falling. I want to see the military rising to dignified heights of professionalism and true patriotism.”

Daw Suu also said she held “no grudge against” the military for keeping her under house arrest for 16 years.

Daw Suu has shown interest in talking with the military and engaging in debates. Daw Aung San Suu Kyi said she was “ready to cooperate with them [the military] if they are really looking for that, for the good of the country.”

Although the military never seemed willing to hold debates, giving up on dialogue was not an option – “we have to persevere.”

Daw Suu pointed out that maybe the military does not fully understand what is meant by dialogue and national reconciliation and how these two concepts are “in everybody’s interest, including theirs.” “Dialogue must be a win-win situation for all parties.”

On ethnic issues

Daw Aung San Suu Kyi said that ethnic groups, including the ceasefire groups, “expressed an interest” in the NLD’s efforts “to revive the spirit of true union.” Daw Suu said the ongoing conflicts in ethnic areas should be resolved “through peaceful means” and not “through armed battles.”

Daw Suu also advocated for the convening of another Panglong Conference “that reflects the feelings of the ethnic groups in the 21st Century.”

On a Commission of Inquiry

Daw Suu said that she supported the establishment of a Commission of Inquiry on crimes in Burma. However, the establishment of a Commission of Inquiry should not lead to “a trial of the generals.” “I only want to create a situation in which there would be no reason for sending anyone from our country before the ICC,” she said.

On foreign investment

Daw Aung San Suu Kyi welcomed economic progress and foreign investment in Burma – with conditions. She urged businesses and companies to “put a premium on respect for the law, on environmental and social factors, [and] on the right of workers.” Investment should promote “transparency and accountability” and “economic growth grounded in human resources development” in Burma. She reiterated that investment should ultimately be designed for “the benefit of the people.”

On economic sanctions

Daw Aung San Suu Kyi repeatedly stated that the issue of economic sanctions should be carefully “reviewed from time to time.” Daw Suu said she was “prepared to work together” with the regime “to remove sanctions that were hurtful to the people at large.” However, there must be “concrete justifications” before sanctions are lifted.

She said she did not look at sanctions “as a bargaining chip but as a way of trying to improve the situation.” Daw Suu said that she did not have “the impression that economic sanctions have really hurt the public.” “Whether or not to lift the sanctions is something to be decided after discussions. At the present situation, I don’t see any reason to lift the sanctions.”

On tourism

Daw Aung San Suu Kyi recently modified the NLD’s stance on tourism, thereby welcoming politically aware, individual, and ethical tourists. The NLD “would not object to individual tourists coming to study the situation and to find out what is really happening in Burma,” Daw Suu said.

On international engagement

Daw Aung San Suu Kyi said that “engagement is a good thing” but urged the international community to engage with pro-democracy forces, not just the regime. She pointed out that the international community’s efforts should be coordinated, instead of being made “individually and discordantly,” in order to be more effective.

On ASEAN and regional support

Daw Aung San Suu Kyi stressed the importance of ASEAN and regional countries to “work in coordination.” She said “if Burma has stability, […] it will benefit the whole region.”

On India

Daw Aung San Suu Kyi said India was “long-standing friend of Burma.” However, she was “saddened” that the current Indian government had failed to support pro-democracy forces in Burma. Daw Suu would like the world’s “biggest democracy” to “play a more active role in […] the process of democratization of Burma.” Daw Suu also encouraged more people to “learn more about Burma” and support the “establishment of democracy in Burma.”

On China

Daw Aung San Suu Kyi said she does not see China as an “enemy” of Burma’s pro-democracy movement. Rather, she considered China to be a “neighbor” that has a “longstanding friendship” with Burma. Daw Suu said the NLD was working towards establishing a line of communication with Chinese authorities in order to convey the message that Burma’s stability can be guaranteed by a government elected by the people and not only by a military regime.

On Thailand

Daw Aung San Suu Kyi said she wished Burma to be a “good friend and good neighbor” to Thailand. She understood the influx of Burmese refugees and migrants “is not easy for Thailand to cope with,” but she urged Thai people to do what they can for them.

On the US

Daw Aung San Suu Kyi welcomed US engagement with the military regime, but she wanted Washington “to be practical about it.”

On the EU

Daw Aung San Suu Kyi said she would like to see the EU take “a more coordinated approach” with regard to its Burma policy and urged the EU to “speak with one voice.” Daw Suu also called on the EU to continue pressuring for “the release of political prisoners, inclusiveness of the political process, specifically with the NLD, and negotiations.”

On the UN

Daw Aung San Suu Kyi said the UN should “play a bigger role” in Burma’s affairs.

ANATOMY OF THE NEW REGIME

According to the SPDC’s 2008 constitution, the 2010 elections seated a bicameral legislature that elected a President as head of state. While the illusion of a democratic presidential system with three branches of government is conveyed, a closer look at the government structure described in the constitution reveals that the military still has a central role in both the legislative and executive branches on both the national and local level. There are only token checks and balances in place between the legislative, executive, and judicial branches of government.

Legislative

National Parliament (Pyidaungsu Hluttaw)

The National Parliament consists of two Assemblies or Hluttaws:

The People’s Assembly (Pyithu Hluttaw) consists of 440 representatives who serve five-year terms.

- 330 representatives are elected on the basis of township and population.
- 110 representatives are Defense Services personnel appointed by the Defense Services Commander-in-Chief.

The National Assembly (Amyotha Hluttaw) consists of 224 representatives who serve five-year terms.

- 168 representatives are elected by each State or Division – 12 from each, including one representative from the one Self-Administered Division and five Self-Administered Zones.
- 56 representatives are Defense Services personnel appointed by the Defense Services Commander-in-Chief.

Division and State Parliaments

The unicameral Division and State Parliaments are comprised of the following:

- Two representatives elected from each township in the Divisions or the States, who serve five-year terms;
- Representatives serving five-year terms elected from each national race constituting 0.1% or more of the national population that are not allocated a Division/State or a Self-Administered Zone/Region in the Division/State in question;
- Defense Services personnel nominated by the Defense Services Commander-in-Chief to comprise up to 25% of the total number of elected representatives.

Executive

Presidency

The Presidency consists of one President and two Vice-Presidents, elected by the Presidential Electoral College. The President and the Vice-Presidents serve five-year terms.

The Presidential Electoral College is composed of three groups from the National Parliament:

- The 330 elected representatives from the People’s Assembly;
- The 168 elected representatives from the National Assembly; and
- The 166 appointed Defense Services personnel from both Assemblies.

Each group elects a Vice-President. Then, the entire National Parliament elects the President from among the three Vice-Presidents. Presidential responsibilities include:

- Appointing Union Ministers including the Chief Ministers of the States and Divisions;
- Granting pardons and granting amnesty based on the recommendations of the NDSC;
- Appointing diplomats;
- Establishing relations with foreign countries;
- Entering into international treaties subject to the consent of the National Parliament;
- Calling special sessions of parliament;
- Issuing laws between sessions of parliament;
- Taking military action in coordination with the NDSC; and
- Declaring war with the approval of the National Parliament.

Ministries

The President appoints Union Ministers. However, the constitution dictates that the President must obtain a “list of suitable Defense Services personnel” from the Defense Services Commander-in-Chief for the following ministries:

- Minister of Defense;
- Minister of Home Affairs;
- Minister of Border Affairs.
Defense Services

The supreme head of the military is the Defense Services Commander-in-Chief. The President appoints the Defense Services Commander-in-Chief with the proposal and approval of the National Defense and Security Council. However, as the 11-member Council is comprised of at least six Defense Service personnel, the appointment of the Commander-in-Chief is likely to be a mere rubber-stamp.

National Defense and Security Council

The National Defense and Security Council is comprised of the following persons:

- (a) President;
- (b) Vice-President #1;
- (c) Vice-President #2;
- (d) Speaker of the People’s Assembly;
- (e) Speaker of the National Assembly;
- (f) Commander-in-Chief of the Defense Services;
- (g) Deputy Commander-in-Chief of the Defense Services;
- (h) Minister for Defense;
- (i) Minister for Foreign Affairs;
- (j) Minister for Home Affairs;
- (k) Minister for Border Affairs.

The constitution does not define the day-to-day role of the National Defense and Security Council. However, the Council takes a lead role in a State of Emergency, wherein it exercises the powers of the legislature, executive, and judiciary before the Parliaments are again formed. Of the total number, four persons will be appointed by the Commander-in-Chief of the Defense Services and one Vice-President chosen by Defense Services personnel, making it likely that at least six members of the Defense Services will sit on the NDSC.

Judicial

Supreme Court

The Supreme Court is comprised of seven to 11 members, including the Chief Justice. The President has the authority to appoint the Chief Justice of the Supreme Court and, in coordination with the Chief Justice, appoint the remaining Justices. While the National Parliament must ratify the President’s selections, they have “no right to refuse” unless it can clearly prove that the President’s choice does not meet the constitutional requirements prescribed. On the Supreme Court, judges must be 50 or older and must retire at age 70.

State and Division High Courts

State and Regional High Courts are comprised of three to seven members. The President, in coordination with the Chief Justice of the Supreme Court and the Chief Minister of the Division or State concerned, nominates the Chief Justice of the High Court of the Division or State. The Chief Minister of the Division or State concerned, in coordination with the Chief Justice of the Supreme Court nominates Judges of the High Court of the Division or State.

In both cases, the Division or State Parliaments must ratify the President’s selections, they have “no right to refuse” unless it can clearly prove that the President’s nominee does not meet the constitutional requirements prescribed. The Division and State High Courts have the authority over courts at the District, Self-Administered Division and Zone; and Township level. Judges serving on the State/Division high courts must be older than 45 and must retire at age 65.

Constitutional Tribunal

The Constitutional Tribunal rules on constitutional questions and is comprised of nine members: three chosen by the President and three chosen by the Speakers of the People’s Assembly and National Assembly respectively.
